

Supplementary Information for:

Classification of three coinciding species (Atlantic cod, polar cod, and northern shrimp) using broadband hydroacoustics

Muriel Dunn^{1,2}, Geir Pedersen³, Malin Daase^{4,5}, Jørgen Berge⁴, Emily Venables⁴, Sünne Linnéa Basedow⁴, Stig Falk-Petersen⁶, Jenny Jensen¹, Tom J. Langbehn⁷, Lionel Camus¹ & Maxime Geoffroy^{2,4}

¹Akvaplan-niva AS, Fram Centre, Postbox 6606, Stakkevollan, 9296 Tromsø, Norway

²Centre for Fisheries Ecosystems Research, Fisheries and Marine Institute of Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's A1C 5R3, Canada

³Institute for Marine Research, 5005 Bergen, Norway

⁴Department of Arctic and Marine Biology, UiT The Arctic University of Norway, 9036 Tromsø, Norway

⁵Department of Arctic Biology, The University Centre in Svalbard, 9171 Longyearbyen, Norway

⁶Independent scientist, 9012 Tromsø

⁷Department of Biological Sciences, University of Bergen, 5020 Bergen, Norway

August 22nd, 2023

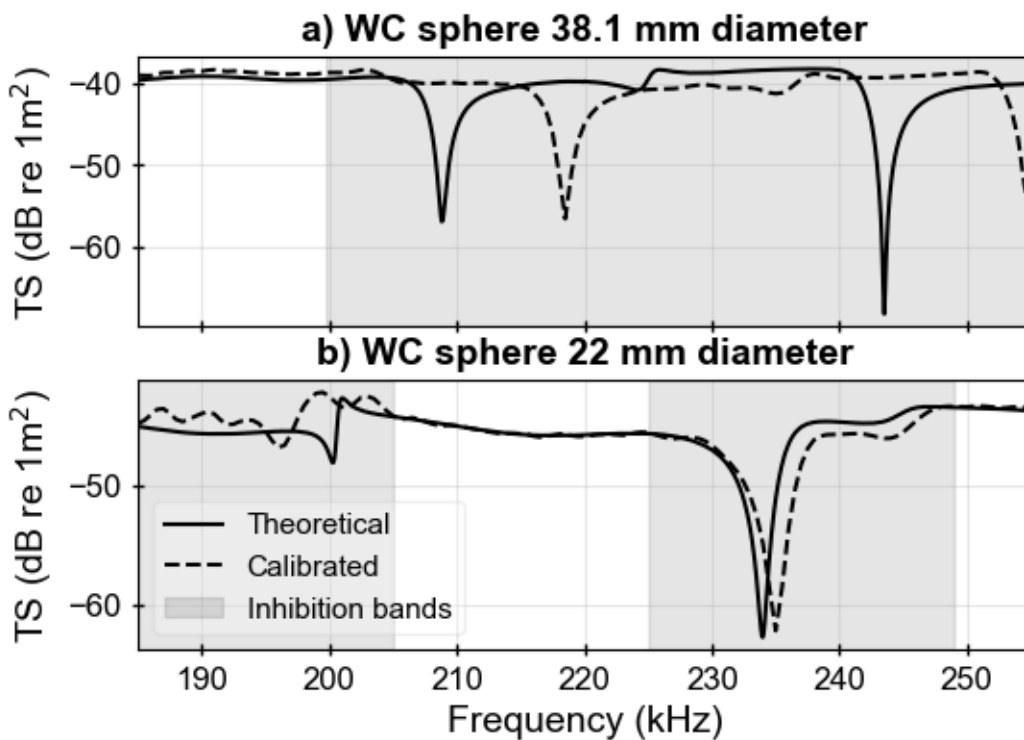

Figure S1: Theoretical target spectra for a) 38.1 mm and b) 22 mm tungsten carbide calibration spheres (black line). Averaged measured target strength with calibration parameters applied for each sphere (dotted line). The calibration parameters applied to the measured target strength measurements were linearly interpolated over the inhibition band (shaded regions) because of the non-flat theoretical target spectra in these regions.